Standards Map

This lesson aligns with CASEL Competencies, National Health Education Standards, and Common Core State Standards. Please refer to the Standards Map for more information.

Lesson Objective

Students will be able to:

- Utilize caring and kindness to develop honest alternatives to deceptive actions.
- Demonstrate an understanding of the term “white lie” and explain how it is a form of dishonesty.

Teacher Connection/Self-Care

As teachers, we are held to a level of integrity that is unprecedented in any other profession. Let’s be honest. You are here because of the students. How can you start and end each day with this simple statement in mind?

Tips for Diverse Learners

- Divide the class into groups with students of varying abilities.
- Read the white lies aloud before splitting up into groups; explain any confusing concepts for English Language Learners

Kindness takes practice and it includes caring for others, having gratitude when others treat you kindly, and including others that are new to our school. Let’s look at how we’ve practiced kindness so far:

- Caring: How have you cared for others in our classroom?
- Gratitude: How have others shown gratitude to you when you have treated them with kindness?
- Inclusiveness: What is one way you have used inclusiveness to make a new friend?

All of these actions require us to be honest about how we treat others and how they affect us.

What is Honesty?

5-7 minutes

Explain that Honesty means being truthful in our words and actions. Telling the truth can be difficult at times. It can be very tempting to tell stories to get out of trouble or avoid consequences when we have done something wrong. However, this is actually a form of dishonesty. Remember: your words have power! Every time you tell the truth, you earn a small amount of trust from others. When people trust us, they can count on us in both little situations and big situations alike. If you get into the habit of always telling the truth with little things, you will find it easier to tell the truth when bigger topics come up! Honesty is the best policy.

Can Lying Be a Good Thing?

10-12 minutes

Have you ever heard the term “white lie”? A white lie is often told when you don’t want to hurt someone’s feelings. Maybe a friend gets a new haircut and you don’t like it. You tell them it looks nice because you don’t want them to feel bad. Although your intentions are to be kind, you are still actually lying!

Let’s watch this short video to check in with other children about honesty:

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=vzTltBI99Lw>

Note: if you are unable to watch this video, simply skip this part.

After watching the video, guide a discussion using the following questions:

- Have you ever told a white lie to protect someone’s feelings?
- Have you ever told a white lie to avoid getting into trouble?
- What can happen after you tell that first white lie? (You wind up telling more, etc.)

Empower

15 minutes

Since our goal is to be kind and caring individuals, we need to work on making sure we are honest with our words, even when we are tempted to tell “white lies”. Explain that students will divide into small groups and work on changing white lies into kind yet honest answers.

- Divide up into groups of 3-5.
- Pass out the “White Lie to Kind Truth” handout to each group.
- Explain that each group will work to rewrite each white lie so that it tells the truth. The goal is to use kind words in an honest way.

Although it may be difficult to tell the truth in some of these situations, practicing now can help you to avoid white lies.

- Allow 10 minutes for the groups to rewrite each white lie.
- Reconvene as a class and read each white lie aloud. Have every group share their honest and kind rewrite.

FOUNDATION®

Reflect

3 minutes

Ask the students the following questions to evaluate their understanding about honesty.

- How did it feel to change these white lies into kind truths?
- Which white lie was the hardest to change and why?
- How would it feel to hear a kind truth versus a white lie?
- Have you ever suspected that someone was telling you a white lie so they wouldn't hurt your feelings?
- How did that affect your ability to trust them?

Remember, honesty means you are telling the whole truth all the time. Sometimes this means we need to use kind truths instead of white lies. Keep practicing when you have opportunities. If you make honesty your policy, people in your life will know they can always count on your words and actions!

Extension Ideas

- Have students repeat the “White Lie to Kind Truth” activity with a loved one at home. Read the answers aloud as a class and compare answers!
- Write the word honesty on the board with each letter going down. As a class, brainstorm ways you can show honesty through your community.

White Lie to Kind Truth

Situation	White Lie Kind Truth
Your friend gets a haircut. He asks you what you think. You don't really like it.	I really like your haircut! Example: Wow, look at your hair! It's so different/shorter/longer, etc.
You are invited to a playdate and can't come because you were already invited to someone else's house. You don't want to hurt your friend's feelings. You got all the answers correct on your math test. Your classmate missed some and is sad.	My mom won't let me come over; sorry. Don't feel bad, I didn't do so well myself.
Your mom asks you if you finished your homework. You actually forgot it at school.	I'm all finished mom!
